Bull Breeding Soundness Clinics

Are your bulls ready to turn with the cows and heifers this Fall? To be sure, have your veterinarian perform a Breeding Soundness Exam (BSE) on them. That involves more than just a semen check.

Since 2005, between 10 to 15% of the 2200 bulls checked at the clinics do not qualify as satisfactory potential breeders. At the clinics the bulls can be given booster vaccinations, treated for internal and external parasites, tested for trichomoniasis and even genomic tested through Zoetis. There is an extra charge for the latter two tests. Avoid a strung out, uneven calf crop in 2016, test all your bulls this fall.

Handouts on bull management, understanding Expected Progeny Difference and tips on buying bulls will be available.

Veterinarians, University of Missouri Extension and Zoetis cooperate on the clinics.
