

Lisa S. Thompson is alumni of the class of 1990 at the University of Missouri-Columbia. She is an educator in the Ritenour School district in St. Louis County, where she has taught for 15 years. Since her employment with Ritenour, she has collaborated with the University of Missouri Extension specialists to advocate and deliver Nutrition and Health programs for their district. Currently, she also teaches at the International Welcome Center, a program that provides an introduction to the U.S. culture and school system, exposure to educational expectations, as well as opportunities to immigrants new to the United States. In addition, she is a fashion historian and stylist for The Modern Classic Society, a non-for-profit organization. In this position, she operates specializing in the collecting of historical/vintage era clothing and textile pieces for teaching and learning experiences.

She holds an Educational Specialist (EdS) in Instructional Leadership with an emphasis in K-12 Literacy Education from Lindenwood University in St. Charles, MO. She has a Master of Arts in Special Reading (K-12) from Fontbonne University in St. Louis, MO. She has a Master of Arts in Human and Environmental with an emphasis in Family & Consumer Science Education. She also has a Certified B-12 from Fontbonne University, as well as a Bachelor of Science in Human and Environmental Sciences with an emphasis in Textile & Apparel Management from the University of Missouri-Columbia. She is a doctoral candidate for Doctor of Education (EdD) in Instructional Leadership with an emphasis in Higher Education Leadership from Lindenwood University (May 2018). Most recently, she was chosen to speak at The International Conference of Dress Historians event called “Dress and War: Clothing and textiles at Home and Abroad during the First World War Era,” in the fall of 2018 in London, England.